Coach nets a scholarship

SOUTHERN River Stars and Crusaders Netball Club coach Blair Pasco is one of five winners of the inaugural Bette Allison coaching scholarships.

Pasco received one of two regional targeted coaching scholarships aimed at furthering the growth and development of hard-working coaches.

The Southern River College teacher, who also coaches the South East Demons in the West Australian Netball League, said she was excited to give back to the netball community.

"I can use my new breadth of knowledge gained from the scholarship to help netballers of all abilities," she said.

Netball WA community general manager Liz Booth said the scholarships would have a positive impact on the game at grassroots level.

"It is wonderful to be able to give these individuals the opportunity to continue to grow and develop so that coaching across the state can continue to flourish."

Pasco will receive part of a 5000 prize pool shared among the four other winners.

The phone call that changed Australian Diamond Courtney Bruce's life. This is Courtney Bruce's story...

Courtney Bruce tells me she doesn't like phone calls all that much. As a stand-alone claim, this would be unremarkable, except for the fact we're on the phone together when she tells me.

I laugh, and point it out. Okay, she concedes, in the past she hasn't liked them, but she's getting better.

And there's probably a good reason why that is. At 23, Bruce is recognized as one of those cliched 'up-and-comers' on our Australian netball scene; a spotlight rests on her progress, expectations grow with every game she plays for Perth's West Coast Fever.

And she's receiving call after call from selectors telling her good news.

The first of these call-ups came from Australian Diamonds coach Lisa Alexander last year. She wanted Bruce on the Diamond's national training camp in Canberra.

"I hate talking on the phone," Bruce reiterates. "It's especially daunting talking to my Diamonds coach because I never know if it'll be good or bad news."

It would be one of the most important phone calls the then 22-year-old would receive, a dream offer for any young netballer across the country. And it was one she didn't want to pick up.

"It was exciting, it was something I had wanted for a long time. I don't remember much of the conversation, I just remember saying yes, yes, yes 100 times and thank you 100 times."

Bruce was born in Perth and has played netball "for as long as she can remember". From the age of about six, her parents threw her and her two younger sisters into the game. It would come to be a very clever move. The gun defender's break-out season came in 2016 when she managed to rattle some of the competition's strongest goalies, earning her a spot in the Diamonds squad by the end of the year.

But it was running out with the girls in Round One of the re-branded Suncorp Super League that was especially memorable for the 23-year-old.

"It was a really good feeling," she says, recalling those first few moments running onto the court. "It felt like a long time coming. There's a lot of WA girls in the team and there was this big sense of pride, playing for our home state was so good."

And she's not wrong. The league has been a long time coming, as has the exposure it has inevitably brought. Channel Nine have jumped on board, and some of our nation's best athletes are getting the kind of attention they've always deserved. And although women's sport seems to be having a moment, it hasn't always been the way

"There's been so much more exposure for us since Channel Nine came on board and since the league has been broadcast on free-to-air. The media has been more interested and that's been huge."

In comparison to most women's sport, netball has never been short of talent. And despite the poor pay and the poor exposure the sport has received in the past, young netballers have never been short of a role model growing up.

"There were always some phenomenal athletes to look up to, so growing up and wanting to be a netballer was never a problem.

"But for sure, it's easier for young girls now, they know they can actually have a career in the sport, especially if it keeps going the way it is now."

It's great, and indeed we are talking more and more about women's sport, but the fact I have to ask Bruce how she juggles completing university playing sport for your country is telling. She's currently trying to get through a psychology degree while trying to crack into the national team for one of the most popular sports in our country. Her answer is simple: there's never been another option.

"We've always been taught we have had to balance it all, even at the AIS (Australian Institute of Sport), because there's no other option. I like having more on my plate, though. I don't like having time to kill.

"Since my time at the AIS, we always had sessions on time management teaching us how to balance these things. Obviously, netball has come a long way, but we're still nowhere near where the men are at, so we've always had to balance doing more than one thing."

So now that so many more young girls will grow up believing they can play sport, what advice would she give them? "To have fun and enjoy it," she says. "I play my best when I'm loving it."

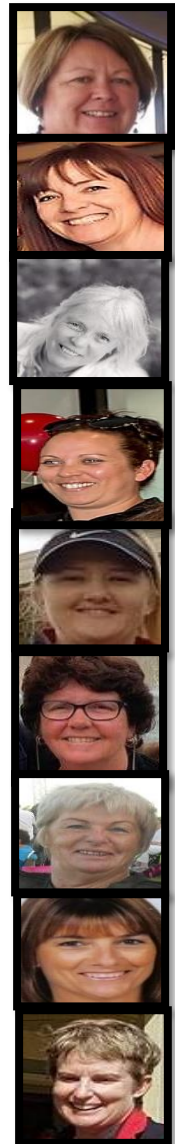

Belinda Hare our UDO at Southern Districts along with Dean Probert were asked to umpire one of the West Coast Fever training session at the State Netball Centre.
